

The Rathtar constellation belongs to the planet of Twon Kete, the planet that Rathtar are native to. The constellation is of the local Rathtar. Legends speak of those who travel during nights the constellation is visible, never making their return. Some say the constellation is actually a black hole that devours ships that leave the planet's atmosphere, though that theory has been heavily debunked.

The constellation is held in high regard by the native species that dwell on Twon Kete. Festivals are immediately to be held under its appearance like a god overseeing its people below. Many believe the constellation must be satiated and offer gifts to Rathtar that live amongst the people, although admittedly, this has ended more in tragedy than anything else.

The constellation was discovered by Professor Laxton of the Aurora Collegium of Sciences, whom on a scientific endeavour to Twon Kete aboard the Taratus, was tasked with studying and experimenting on the local wildlife. Many rathtar were collected and were taken to be sold as part of the Iron Menagerie on Arx, though whether they made the trip remains to be seen.

Why? Because the constellation was high in the sky when the rathtar were collected. Many assume the trip will result in disaster...