

The Vulptex Constellation

Location: Crait, Outer Rim Territories.
Represented Imagery: A leaping Vulptex.

Report submitted for the approval of The Aurora Collegium of Sciences.

Located in a remote sector of the Outer Rim Territories, Crait is a small and isolated planet covered in a layer of white salt over its red soil. This mineral rich planet is mostly desolate and uninhabited, with the exception of scattered mining facilities and outposts remaining from the days of the Rebel Alliance and the Resistance. The only common sight on the planet is the local wildlife, most notably the Vulptex.

These fascinating creatures with crystalline bristles are a welcome sight in any inhabited settlement on the planet. They appear to be empathetic, even to members of other species, so they can sense when someone is in danger and will help guide them away from it. Because of this, it's no surprise that people who live on Crait are very fond of them and even see them represented in the night sky. The constellation takes the shape of a leaping Vulptex and is used for navigation by the locals. It is believed that, should anyone end up getting lost, all they need to do is follow the star that represents the Vulptex's head which will lead them to safety. It is this belief that gave rise to the local saying: "Home is where the Vulptex leaps."

I believe this information to be of use to the Brotherhood in the event of future missions on Crait. Especially if a Brotherhood member ends up getting lost.
