Tactical Analysis:

The SSD Suffering serves as the flagship for the Dark Brotherhood Navy and represents the most significant threat in the Iron Throne's fleet. Unfortunately, its reputation as a flagship is well deserved. Heavily protected and armed to the teeth with over four thousand cannons and a multitude of ballistic weaponry, our forces stand little chance in a direct confrontation. Intel suggests that the enemy is currently fielding nearly minimal - roughly two dozen TIE Fighters despite the massive ship's capacity of up to one hundred and forty four individual ships.

FLASH: Intelligence Reports that a majority of SSD Suffering's fighter squads were in fact abandoned at the battle of Antei. This confirms a reduced lack of fighter threat.

Due to the unknown number of crew and troops aboard, boarding would likely prove inefficient. In addition, beyond the skeleton crew of fifty thousand required for such a vessel, crew numbers are unknown, as well as specifics of chain of command and individuals of note upon the vessel, though it is safe to assume the vessel is generously manned and commanded by the most competent of the Iron Thrones's naval leaders, given its essential nature.

Despite its formidability and lack of fighters, the SSD Suffering is rarely fielded without hefty support. Without this fighter contingent, it is likely to field at least one heavily armed ship alongside it for support.

FLASH: Scouts report sightings of battleship CSD Cotelin and cruiser BAC Undaunted in the vicinity of Korriban.
