

Maximum Brevity Series III – Looking Back

Rian is impulsive and fearless, not afraid to push his limits even against insurmountable odds and rarely retreats. However having pushed himself over his own limits several times coming up victorious resulted in him believing himself infallible and that rules are for other people, well at least some.

While this might serve well enough for someone in a lower Leadership position it isn't what one is looking for who stands in the political spotlight. It is said that one grows into greater responsibilities and this is exactly what happened to Rian. The boldness, the inescapable tendency to impetuosity, everything that defined his personality is still a part of him but a maturity born from the responsibilities that came with his ascendancy within the leadership ranks of Taldryan more and more influenced his decisions as Summit member of Taldryan.

But with Rian being stripped from most of his responsibilities as he retired from the Taldryan Summit he is also freed from the boundaries that restrained his personality, if this will be the truth or if the sense of maturity that became part of his personality over the last years might still influence his decisions has yet to be seen.
