

- Artifact Name: The Sword of (_____) . not good and unsure of the naming system for New Tythonian things.
- Assumed Location: Forested Island off the south eastern peninsular of Milil'ea
- Type: Ancient Sword
- Artifact's Estimated Age: 1500 to 1000 BBY
- Danger level: 3 or more depending on how far the cult goes.
- Physical Description: Highly and Masterfully crafted Metal sword that was so perfectly preserved in a hidden vault in ancient ruins that it bares no rust and is still razor sharp
- Description of Ability: No noticeable imbued abilities except for the cult like following the holder of the sword receives. This sword comes from the Iwu Koraha Legends of their lost capital and culture. Some of the elders always said that gods from space came many years ago and taught them many advance things. Until due to a being provoked and trick by evil space gods they were driven from the world and took most of the technology with them. The finder and bearer of the sword could be seen as the gods returned to unify the Iwu Koraha tribes and forgive them for their past sins.

- FYI this fits the current wiki article when it states "It is known from oral tradition and scarce artifats, that their current tribal system developed many centuries ago. Scarce resources seemed to band groups of natives together into large families and tribes through necessity which created friendly and iften familial relations with other similar groups. After centuries the tribes of the Korahaii bonded into a single large alliance which recognizes every tribal leader and tribe as independent. When exactly this occurence happened remains unknown but tradition states that after a long conflict between the tribes, all the chiefs gathered under one tent and agreed to share all that they owned. This theory is highly unlikely and often dismissed as traditional story telling and embellishment. It is more likely that the tribes gradually moved towards a symbiotic lifestyle over the centuries, due to the lack of resources.

- Another theory seems to have take root with some of the Jedi Archeologists in recent years. It states that during the centuries before the unification, one or more of the many tribes discovered a way to mine and process copper, giving them a significant advantage both in cultural, technological and economic growth. Due to the jump in technology, these tribes took a leadership role and gradually subjugated the others under their rule. As time passed by and leaders changed, the bond that held them together loosened and what was left was the current order of unified but independent singular tribes lead by a "council" of chieftains. This theory is being researched still but is gradually being accepted as more evidence is uncovered."

this can be tweaked a bit but could work.
