

Strands of Fate: Home

Rins'zler spent a large portion of his life, drifting around the Galaxy, as a former Mandalorian Super Commando. He visited hundreds of worlds and many different cultures: some he went to help crush, others he went to save. While he and his fellow mercenaries prided themselves on their sense of honour and loyalty, there were some events even they had to question their involvement in.

His profits, gained honestly or not, were a sizeable fortune over the years, enough that he could settle down and live a comfortable life on any number of worlds. However, he purchased the Shadowborn, a marauder Corvette, and had it specially modified to use a droid crew.

Within the ship, he had a unique and one of a kind Neural AI network latticed among the ship into which he installed the Sith Device in which his former partner was now trapped. The device linked her to this network, permitting her the freedom to access any part of the ship and have full control over its systems. Alas, this was probably the closest she would ever get to freedom from her prison.

The ship, once finished, used up a large chunk of Rins'zler profits, but it was his home and served him well for many years. It was in this ship that he returned to the great city on Selen.

Rins'zler is semi retired from his former trade, his time taken up with the activities of his house and clan, his once magnificent ship has seen better days. Docked at Giletta Spaceport, the ship is in need of expensive repairs if it is ever to fly again. While he would love to utilise the funds he has stashed away in various accounts, these are for emergency use (and his retirement)

Since it is little more than an expensive series of (admittedly secure and well armoured) rooms, its weapons previously stripped and donated to the Clan, Rins'zler has used his knowledge, skills and contacts with his uncle to rig and furnish it as best as he can.

Within the ship there are:

- 18 State rooms, each come fully equipped with Refreshers and computer points linked to the Arconan Network
- A large droid operated kitchen
- 4 Meditation rooms
- 2 Holographic combat suits
- Holographic planning chamber
- Multiple storage areas
- Internal security systems and defences
- Armory with associated forge/weapons repair and construction area

Recent events have meant that Rins'zler is no longer alone, his recent marriage to Princess Olvar has given him a new direction in life. However, the ship still echos and is very empty. He has contemplated offering some of the accommodation spaces to members of his House and Clan, a proposition he has yet to discuss with the appropriate officials. With the recent events surrounding Arcona, it may become very useful to have secure accommodation to help replace some of what has been lost during the conflict. It would also be a good place to house those who may need additional protection, the ship may well be docked and grounded, but it is no less secure, it still retains all of its former internal defences. Its shields and external armour are as strong as the day she was purchased. Rins'zler would feel uncomfortable living in a space that was any less secure.