Notes/Extra

Ron grew up on Coruscant into a middle class family who worked in the shipping business. Things were never too hard or too easy for the Mauve's until the Empire came into power. More regulations and taxes were enacted throughout the galaxy, making it more difficult for the Mauve's to drum up legit business. Ron was trained by his father in the art of smuggling, at the time only used for various supplies to and from Coruscant.

At the age of 27 a shady group of individuals who knew that the Mauve's could get things from one place to another came looking for help. This time though the cargo wasn't merchandise, it was people. These people were the Inquisitorius needing to get some men inside enemy territory, under the guise of a resupply ship. Ron's father was totally against it, not wanting to get involved with such business, but Ron was always naturally curious and always up for a bit of danger. He was able to smuggle the Inquisitorius' men in and out without a hitch, and has been working for them ever since. He received combat training there as a precaution, since not every job goes as easily as his first one did. He has a knack for blasters and took really well to them.
