

From his personal point of view, the siege of Karufr hasn't affected the Taldrya extremely as Rian had learned pretty early that rising to power in a Clan as prominent as Taldryan puts him likewise into the view of others who enviously wants to bring him or the Clan down in their own favor. That for Rian has long since started to bring most of his wealth off world under the cover of a merchant and bounty hunter known by the name of Vrayth Arastair Xyler. Xyler since runs a successful business based on Concordia while his financial accounts were stocked in a secured vault belonging to the InterGalactic Banking Clan on the sovereign world Scipio. While this allowed him to transfer the material goods that are of value for him into a safe place in one move, this business made it partially difficult to transfer his financial wealth as he had to cover each transfer with a completed contract that likewise furthered his reputation and put him at risk to blow up his cover.

However the only financial loss he fared during the siege of Karufr was temporarily as the destruction of his personal starships Ravenous Hunter and Harpy when Rian and his fiancé were shot down by one of the Stardestroyers while tried to help a vessel full of civilians escape from Karufr. The Ravenous Hunter then crashed into a mountain range, forcing Rian and his fiancé to escape in the last seconds using the freighters auxiliary ship Harpy that they were forced to leave behind on the surface of Karufr when they escaped with the rest of the Taldryan fleet.