

Thuvis Imperial Shipyard

Abandoned before the Empire became tangled in the Galactic Civil War due to being an unsustainable strain on strategic resources. Part of the large space-station that floats in orbit around the star 'Lyra'. These are a collection of arms and ports that have been attacked by the Collective. This particular cluster contains the operational shipyard segments aside from the command center in the middle.

Much of the northern part of the station is in disrepair, while the southern parts are still mostly intact with plenty of equipment and engineering tools strewn about. Ahead of the docks there are several merchant stands, refueling stations and spacers that make their living by selling scavenged goods or offer commodities. No matter in which area of the complex you find yourself in, the sound of clanging, clunking, squeaking and rattling of metal is always present.

When entering the docks via the rusty metal hallways, there are a plethora of wiring, construction materials, smelters, valuable ship parts and pipes that may present an obstacle or opportunity to guests. Each section is divided by heavy doors and thick walls. These passageways are usually divided in three levels, with the heavy equipment on the ground floor, replacement parts on the second level and electrical wiring plus ventilation shafts on the third and highest level.

The damage is eminently noticeable in the northernmost section. Blast doors that have gotten stuck, buzzing electrical wiring going rampant, flickering lights and worst of all massive holes in the hull of the giant complex. This means that in several sectors visitors will be met with the vacuum of space and should equip themselves with a fully sealed, self-contained suit in order to survive the hostile environment.