

West Lyra Medical Facility Construction Site Lyra Colony

Situated on the western outskirts of the ever-expanding Lyra Colony the framework of the new West Lyra medical facility rises into the air as a monument to the resident's determination to improve their lives. Girders dot the landscape whilst droids and machines go about their duties readying the construction project for the next day's work.

The lower three floors of the facility are half-finished, sheeting covers the holes where doors and windows will go. Unpainted walls provide an almost labyrinthian structure with no discernible features guiding the way. Rising another four floors above these three is the framework itself. Protruding into the air, exposed to the elements and awaiting it's covering.

Pulleys and ropes hang here and there, ready to hoist new materials up to the building site. Whilst ramps provide access to the workman and their droid companions. Work is currently halted due to the most recent rainstorm, the lashing water and striking thunder making it unsafe for even the bravest of workers.

The building site itself is contained within a high electric powered fence. Providing both security from trespassers but also a deadly obstacle for anyone trapped within. Due to this security measure, it is not uncommon to find tools simply abandoned around the work site, their owners knowing full well they are safe.

To the untrained, this place could be fatal. But to those who desire a risk, the site could prove the perfect place for a bit of fun and mayhem.
