Phase I

So I started by taking a sheet of plexiglass that I had in my shop, and I cut 4.5 in triangles out. Fitted and sanded pieces to get a nice solid fit. Then I glued pieces together with a hot glue gun.

Phase II

After the glue set, I began to tape off and fill gaps with modeling Bondo, allowing to set and then began to sand in three stages with 2x 120 grit & 1 time with 80 grit sandpaper.

Phase III

After filler set then I went on to paint. Putting two coats of gloss blood red. Letting that set overnight I hand painted the edges in black.

Phase IV

While I let the paint dry overnight, I wouled on stand for Holocron. I used a piece of 1x6 I had cut measured, and then miter cut the sides and front. Sanded it down real quick with some 120 grit sandpaper and began painting. Two coats of gloss black and two coats of clear does the trick! I added the stencil in the front for visual effects and add mystery to the Offering as it contains a name within the Aerebesh letters! Solve it.....

Phase V

Then I printed and cut out (on transparency paper) the glyph's stencils and centered them on the Holocron. Then I used the stencil from the transparency to cut out the gold filler stock to make my design and to accent not only the glyphs but the whole Holocron.

Phase VI

After getting the stencils carefully on with small pieces of double-sided craft tape, I put it all together and used two LED lights to highlight the Holocron from the inside out.

The Final
