

Name: The Chrome Dome From Home

Physical Specifications: The topmost portion of a Mandalorian's helmet, suitable for an average sized humanoid being, cut above the area where the T-visor previously ended. Made of Beskar and coated in Chromium, it is very pretty dome, indeed, the shiniest chrome dome from home.

Technical Specifications: Can be used as a bowl, worn to protect the very top of the head, or used as a guide when cutting one's hair. Offers full peripheral vision to the wearer on account of a complete lack of T-visor. It is said that when the night is darkest, one can see constellations that would normally appear invisible to the naked eye by looking into the dome's reflection.

History: Scavenged from the remains of a helmet that is believed to have belonged to a mighty Mandalorian warrior who is in turn believed to be a descendant of Mandalore's nephew's classmate's cousin twice removed on his mother's side. It is rumored to have once been put to playful use by one Satine Kryze and one Obi-Wan Kenobi.
