

The Mythosaur

I know it sounds like a cop-out but hear me out. It is a name appropriate for the size and ferocity of the Golan III battle station. In Mandalorian lore they are the beasts the size of a small city that were considered one of the most ferocious enemies in Mandalorian history. Perhaps also the most recognized and used symbol in all of Mandalorian history is the depiction of the Mythosaur skull. Their bones were used for everything including weapons. The breastbone was made into the mask that was passed down as the visible sign of Mandalore the leader of all the Mandalorian clans. As a clan of Mandalorians and mercenaries, it is a way to honor the past and evoke a sense of the roots of clan Vizsla. Even those who have forgotten the might of the Mandalorians know the symbology behind the name and symbol. Even among the remaining Mandalorians, the Mythosaur is revered and this station deserves a name befitting its size, strength and owners. In the Mandalorian show itself the Ugnought Kuiil stated the Mandalorians used to ride the Mythosaurs. Which was not denied by the actual Mandalorian leaning towards that is either fact or at least a myth Mandalorians want to be perpetuated. While not exactly a direct link to Clan Vizsla since the last known Mythosaur has been dead for thousands of years there is no denying its mark on the entire Mandalorian culture. So how cool would it be for Clan Vizsla to 'ride' the Mythosaur once again as the name of our now fully operational battle station?