

A threat assessment on darling Skar? Oh my, this does sound fun. Very well, allow me just a moment to consider my notes.

Let us begin with his strengths, shall we? He is a good asset for the Clan. Implacable, unrelenting, truly a force to be reckoned with. Physically, he is an impressive specimen, capable of incredible feats of strength and endurance. He has trained hard in both hand-to-hand and lightsaber combat, in both cases favoring aggressive fighting styles.

His most powerful Force powers are also directed toward making him stronger in combat. He can easily amplify his abilities and has a reasonably good ability to heal. He has also honed his ability to sense threats beforehand, a useful skill.

His mental skills are rather impressive as well. He has a reasonably decent mental fortitude, and his Mind Trick ability is almost as good as mine.

He has trained to be a weapon, but he is not a perfect one. Certainly, he is reasonably intelligent, but he is not perceptive. What's more, he carries significant psychological baggage. Even better, he has made it obvious that he has an obvious weakness: Samantha Tameike.

Oh, do not recoil in horror like that. I would never harm a child, especially not one as valuable as young Samantha. But let us be honest, Skar has never been the most stable individual, and if he should 'go off the reservation' so to speak, the Tameike child would be the easiest was to incapacitate him.

For the longest time, the death of his wife haunted him. The knowledge that he is responsible for her death nearly broke him. It drove him away from the clan and into isolation, after all. Though he does not speak of it, I suspect that the pain still haunts him even to this day.

So, if he were to become convinced that he was responsible for harming the child? Well, it would likely shatter him. Given his past behavior, he would most likely withdraw, or perhaps even end his own life. At the very least, it would distract him, and make it easier to detain or remove him.

As to how he could be convinced that he had harmed the Tameike child? Well, the easiest method would be to utilize illusion to convince him of what happened. As I said before, he is many things but observant is not one of them.

Of course, there are other ways he could be convinced, none of which would involve harming the child. Use of psychotropic drugs and intelligence manipulation may also work.

Finally, if all else fails, the use of long range arsenal and/or snipers would do the trick. Skar is deadly in single combat, but a even the most dedicated warrior will fall if enough overwhelming force is applied.