DISPLAYING

Right. Rogon Skar. Twenty-Six years of age, eight of those spent in Arcona's happy halls. Eight years, and the guy goes through four limbs, most of his functioning organic organs, a spouse, and most of his biological or adopted family. I'm honestly starting to question why anyone would think to stick around here. Not to undermine the divine wisdom of our glorious and eternal psycho-magicians in chief, as they're paying my tab this month, but thi' lizard has gone through enough punishment to turn him into a microwave oven, and he still accepted that Quaestor job. Honestly.

Back on track. Rogon Skar, despite his questionable wisdom, may pose a salient threat to the continued state of the Iron Throne. Say what you will, and I will (as this screen protects me from any of RETRIBUTIVE FAULT's retribution), he remains a powerful sith. Analysis points towards specific precognitive adroitness, a skill that is reinforced by talent for biological amplification. Moreover, target displays an odd proclivity for Force-driven manipulation. This, combined with his physical talents and his mastery over the lightsaber, means that he presents a blue-level assassination threat. While less adept at long-range confrontation, Skar has proven capable of withstanding extreme physical punishment. Open engagement is, therefore, not advised unless directly necessitated.

There is one, rather glaringly obvious reason for Skar being singled out as a blue-level threat. While most former summiteers are regulated to green or orange threat-levels [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Rogon is not like most Summiteers. Namely, he is completely and totally unstable. To put it lightly, he got hit with the Sith-stick just a fad too hard, and went off the deep-end from there. The assassination of his master and adopted grandfather, Zakath, at the hands of then-Voice Marick Tyris, triggered a psychotic break in Skar that him end up dirtying his own hands with the blood of his own wife. That's not the sort of thing that our good, sweet lizard is going to forget, especially not at such a ripe young age. Since then, he's displayed a sort of...psychotic fracture. Separated from Tyris, he remained relatively stable. Now that Tyris [REDACTED] has returned to a relatively happy, stable, and productive life within Arcona, however, Skar seems to have doven directly off of the deep-end. Moreover, recent events on the island of Atolli [REDACTED] appear to have further disrupted his mental state. The target lashed out at several key members of the clan, including the former Consul Atyiru [REDACTED], Praetor to the Herald Tir'Eivra [REDACTED], and junior summiteer Kaern [REDACTED]. It is only logical to believe that, nudged in the right direction, Skar could be led to attack the Summit, and the throne, with similar recklessness.

Thankfully, we are presented with multiple routes to remove him, should he choose to present a threat, either by attacking the throne or [REDACTED] [REDACTED] The most obvious method to remove him is simply to wait, or sabotage his life support systems while he is in hospital. Years of injury and chronic illness are waiting to overcome Skar. In my professional opinion, I've never been handed a target before where our most efficient option is simply to wait for their synthetic heart to finally shit the bed in the middle of the night. Options for biological support system sabotage remain open, most likely through replacement of Skar's primary care physician with a suitable selected scalpel. None chosen by our former Proconsul, however. You know what happens with the freaks that he tries to pick.

That's my input. More details attached in the supplementary file. Keep your eyes on this one, Director.

SUPPLEMENTARY ASSESSMENT PROVIDED BY AGENT

Well. Nice not to need to sterilize things for our good Director any longer. Funny, he gets to put the black ink wherever the hell he wants on those papers, just like he used to go spilling his white ink over every shaking ass in down, but he never gets to see the stuff that the Lady actually wants to read, does he? Poor man. This is the juicy stuff.

Right. Rogon Skar. Everything above still applies, save for the fact that the 'secondary threat' mentioned above -that of Rogan attempting to sway the outcome of the next successor to the throne- is by far the greatest provided. Skar has legitimacy that can not be denied. If we are to remove him, we must also ruin him. Thankfully, he's already given us the tools to do so. The target is extremely unstable; all that is required is a miniscule amount of stimulus to produce a catastrophic reaction.

There are two possible routes to take. One is to manipulate Skar's connection to a native Selenian, Sey Jenirra. Agent analysis has revealed her to be receptive to Force suggestion. "Suggesting" that she attack Skar, spurring him to kill her, would likely result in a psychotic, and suicidal, break. We give him the rope and chair, he hangs himself, essentially. Or, even better, we utilize his connection to Samatha Tameike. Manipulate Skar into her, You-Know-Who will remove him from play...though, that course of action could pack serious consequences. Consequences that I don't even want to begin thinking about. You know what the frack' she would do.

In my opinion? Just sabotage his damn heart medication. Go for the girlfriend if you need to. Leave the Tameikes out of this.
