

Odan-Urr camp

39 ABY

Myrk

The hunt for Desired One begins. The Odan-Urr and Plagueis clans search for a lost artifact on the planet Myrk. Both clans setup camps, which serve as a background for them to hide from the enemy.

One evening, the Odanites sat around the fire and discussed the next steps in the search for the artifact. The young Jedi Elyon de Neverse also sat by the fire. She listened to the others talk about their task and thought about the right tactics before anyone around said they could tell stories about the other clan. Everyone agreed and sat around the fire and listened.

"What if you told us how you get to Fort Dooku," one member suggested to another Odanite.

"That's a great story," he called, and began to tell the story. "As you may all know, Fort Dooku is the base of the Plagueis clan of the House of Tyranus on the planet Aliso. This fortress serves as a refuge for its members, and because it is a military facility, its defense is considered insurmountable. I was on Aliso to do a clan job there when it occurred to me that I would like to take a closer look at the fortress."

"The fortress was built in the local style of the surrounding buildings, so I think a lot of people who don't know about its purpose think it's just a palace with higher security. However, people are avoiding this place by arc. The reputation of the members of the House of Tyranus is known throughout the city. I found out from the locals," he said, blinking ostentatiously.

"So you went to the bar, as is your custom," someone remarked aloud.

"Sure, because you can meet different types of people at the bar," the narrator replied with a smile and continued.

"The security of the fortress was at a high level - automatic towers, a force field and many other pitfalls. I would not be able to step inside the main entrance, so I decided to take it over the wall. Even though there were cameras and motion sensors all around, I managed to find a blind spot. And then I started climbing." Everyone listened to him enthusiastically, waiting to see what came out of it."

"When I carefully got to the top," the narrator continued. "So I was almost knocked back by a patrolling droid right at the top of the wall. With the help of the Force, I bounced back and sent against the opposite wall, where it crashed and fell down."

"Fortunately, no one paid attention to it, so I swung over the edge of the wall without any problems. Which was weird because I was expecting more resistance"

"After I climbed down where he headed along the walls to enter the Citadel. Before I could get inside. That members of the House of Tyranus marched through the door and cut the funds before entering. I quickly hid behind a pile of boxes and watched them. Members of the Plagueis clan had a close combat training lesson. And let me tell you how rude the individual members of the House of Tyrannus were on newcomers. I haven't seen that yet. It was a cast battle alloy of life and death."

"Newcomers got really into the body. In some cases, I felt that it could be enough for an adult. But as I watched, I was exposed by the same droid that almost knocked me off the wall."

"Everyone rushed at me shortly and took me into isolation. So I was interrogated. And I was told by Aura that it gave her enough work to get me out of there. And that was the story of my curiosity and Fort Dooku," the narrator said, smiling. Then everyone applauded him.

The Odanites then sat around the fire and sent a storytelling relay.