

Once a crown jewel in the Galactic Empire's research division, this now defunct research station has lay dormant and unmanned for years. The exterior of the center is barren, save for the stripped and broken down remains of speeder bikes and cargo transports. The remains of dead stormtroopers and imperial scientists can be seen, having been picked clean by nature and years of decay. This site has been classified a no-trespassing zone by the Dondoran leaders.

Inside this once great research station, the many great amenities have been scavenged and torn apart. Glass from shattered vials, and tanks litter the floor making it a hazard for any who choose to walk these long darkened halls. Electricity no longer works making the only source of illumination the sun from outside the transparisteel windows.

The many offices of imperial officers lie in disarray with reports and datapads scattered across the floor. All files deemed important or classified have long since been removed after the fall of the Empire. This research station is now a shell of its former glory.