

Imperial Intelligence Center is a group of vast buildings on the outskirts of the Caelestis City. Buildings are made of durasteel and are painted gray both inside and outside. They are a tribute to paranoia that all spies suffer from. There are no windows on the external walls of the buildings in order to limit threat of spying on people working in the Imperial Intelligence. There are numerous check points inside of each building. Anyone entering any building must confirm their identity through hand prints gates. Everyone is being searched at least twice, both when entering and leaving the buildings.

Most of buildings surface is dedicated to various sections of the Imperial Intelligence. The trick is that the sections are mixed in each building, so that destruction of a part of a building or even two or three buildings do not cause loss of gathered data, because it is downloaded simultaneously to all computers in every building. People work in private offices, but there are also rooms for group meetings. Interior of the buildings is as dull as the exterior with various colours signing areas of work of different departments of the Imperial Intelligence.

Each building is equipped with internal security system including automated blaster turrets. There is an option to quickly spread a neurotoxin that renders intruders unconscious for several hours through ventilation system and toxin dispensers located all over the buildings. There is a platoon of Stormtroopers stationed in each building and they are equipped with helmets that have special filters to prevent the toxin from affecting them,
