

Base 1468
38 ABY
Kamino system

The X-wing left hyperspace near the planet Kamino, which was known for the Great Clone Army, who served under the command of the Jedi Generals during the Clone Wars. After the rise of the Empire, the cloning processes were stopped and the clones retired. The inhabitants of Kamino left the factory where the clones were grown, but it is believed that this is not the only clone base. Eva Gagemon, a member of the Resistance, had the task of finding out whether these rumors were true. A young 18-year-old girl of medium stature with short brown hair who is now looking down at the blue surface of the planet. Her target was Base 1468, which housed the archives.

The X-wing landed on the landing pad after a difficult flight through the atmosphere, and Eva made sure on the navigation map that the coordinates were correct, and because the coordinates agreed, her mission was beginning.

The storm intensified, and the strings of rain crashed into the x-wing like small hail. Eva carefully climbed out of the cockpit and closed it behind her. The ocean's surface, which formed the entire surface of the planet, was turbulent and the waves crashed against the bottom of the base.

Eva hurried across the landing pad to one of the base entrances. The door was energized, but they didn't open. The girl quickly dismantled the panel and connected the cables to create a small discharge that moved the door mechanism and it partially opened. Eva reached inside and pushed the door tentacles together.

So she went inside and started looking around. After a few heartbeats, she headed to the base to search for access to the archive.

"Where the hell can it be, no one's here," Eva said to herself, and continued down the dark corridors to the center of the base, where the archive might be.

After a moment of wandering, she felt an uncomfortable feeling that was explained to her as a tremor of the Force. It was the same feeling as during the Naboo Resistance mission that Eva felt when her eyes met the gaze of the young girl who was looking at Eva. Eva was shocked and took a deep breath to calm herself. Eva learned from a passerby that the girl was a Jedi and that she was a member of the Odan-Urr Clan of the great Brotherhood of Force users. Neither of them paid attention to this tremor, and they preferred to get out of the way, but none of them knew that their paths would clash again.

Eva turned sharply, and to her surprise, the same girl dressed in a blue Jedi robe stood in front of her. Eva felt like she had been watching her for a long time, and because she didn't know her intentions, she quickly pulled the blaster out of its holster and fired at the unknown girl. However, the wound dodged and disappeared into the side hallway.

"Then it'll be even more interesting, maybe I could find her and ask her about the archive, but I don't know where she went," Eva sighed and put the blaster back in its holster. Then she continued down the corridors until she came across a functional display. She started looking for a map in it to find the exact location of the archive. When she noticed the reflection on the screen, the girl stood behind her again. Eva quickly reached for the blaster as she spun.

But the girl raised her hands above her head and shouted, "I don't want to hurt you."

Eva stared at her for a moment, then lifted her hand slightly from the blaster and said, "wait, I know you from somewhere. I saw you on Naboo a few months ago and I felt something like a tremor of the Force. Somehow I don't know how to describe it, and who are you? "

"My name is Elyon de Neverse, I am a Jedi and a member of the Odan-Urr Clan. Yes, we met on Naboo, my home planet. And yes, what you felt was the same vibration of the Force that we both felt today. That's why we're talking now. Our meetings are not coincidences. It's the will of the Force," the young Jedi replied, looking at the girl in front of her.

"And what's your name," she added.

"My name is Eva Gagemon," the girl replied.

"Why are you here," Eva asked, because it was strange that they met in the same place at the same time.

"I came here looking for my lost lightsaber, but I wonder what you're doing here?" Elyon asked in a calm, even voice.

"According to records, the clone archive is supposed to be hidden here," Eva said, watching the girl in front of her.

"Interestingly." Elyon sighed, thinking for a moment, then said, "If you're interested, I can help you."

Eva stared at her for a moment. She was used to doing it herself because she didn't trust people. Her past has taught her that people can disguise themselves. Her father wanted to sell it to the Knights of the Ren. Therefore, she escaped and became a member of the Resistance.

But in the end, she said, "All right, but then our paths split again, I don't believe in the Force."

"That's a fair offer." The young Jedi answered and smiled.

"If you follow me, I'll show you the archive."

"You know where it is," Eva breathed in surprise.

"Of course, * Elyon replied, gesturing to show her the direction of her walk.

After a while, the two girls arrived at a massive armored door behind which the cloners' data were kept.

"I'm surprised no one stole it. They're probably scared," the young Jedi said, examining the lock mechanism.

"She's scared and what," Eva wondered.

"They say they're bypassing a failed crazy clone," Elyon said, examining the door lock.

"You can open it," she asked impatiently.

"Of course," Elyon replied, reaching out her right hand and closing her eyes, at which point she was stretching for the Force. It only took a few moments, and the lock on the door clicked and the door partially opened apart. Eva watched carefully, and then as soon as the door swung open she stretched.

Elyon followed. Then, with the help of the Force, she opened the door even more so she wouldn't have to stretch. The young girl was already sitting at the entrance portal of the archive, trying to get it up and running. It didn't take long for the screen to pop up. The girl was skilled in this regard. The young Jedi stood behind her, watching her at work for a moment. Then she turned and looked at the archive.

Something's wrong, Elyon thought as she looked around. Despite the rumors of a crazy clone, no one tried to get in here. The Jedi crossed her arms in front of her chest and thought. Eva's insults tore her from her thoughts.

"I don't think that's possible ... after all, I don't think so," Eva cursed, getting up quickly from the portal.

"What's happening?" Elyon asked, returning to the girl.

"Nothing, just such a small detail. All the bank's data is blank. They erased it before they left. And something tells me you knew about it. That's why you were so willing to help me. I shouldn't have associated with the Jedi. You're all the same, Empire ... First Order." Eva spoke quickly, raised her voice, and blushed a little. She walked around Elyon and was about to leave, but something stopped her. The girl stopped just behind Elyon.

"If I knew, I wouldn't have brought you here," Elyon countered in a calm voice, wanting to object, realizing that she sensed a strange presence.

The young Jedi turned on their heels to face a clone of a failed batch. The smaller, humped man only remotely resembles mature clones. The clone aimed the blaster at them, then began shouting, "You have nothing to look for here. Get out of our home. And he started firing. Elyon's reaction was prompt, she unbuckled her new lightsaber from her belt, lit a sapphire blade, and stepped forward in front of Eve.

After a while, the clone stopped firing because he found it didn't make sense. So he dropped the blaster and lunged at them. Eva pulled the blaster onto the clone and he fucked.

"One more step and I'll have to use the weapon," she warned in a trembling voice.

The clone just smiled and moved forward. Eva held her finger on the trigger, but couldn't fire.

"Please don't do this. I know you have a problem with trust, but please trust me and don't hurt him," Elyon pleaded, reaching out her left free hand toward the clone. With that movement, she summoned the Force and closed her eyes. She felt the clone's consciousness and, with the help of Telepathy, calmed him, and the clone stopped. His will was weakened by the passage of the mind, and thus Elyon was able to communicate with him, but also to control him.

Eva continued to be ready to fight, but then the Jedi sent a stream of emotions of friendship and trust to her. This made the girl lower her weapon.

The three stood in silence in the middle of the room for a moment until the clone collapsed.

"What did you do to him," Eva asked, turning sharply on the young Jedi.

"I just convinced him, with the help of my will and the Force, that he wanted to sleep. And he fell asleep," Elyon replied, turning off her lightsaber and returning it to her belt.

"What about him now? And how is it possible that he is alive? The Clone Wars ended 60 years ago."

"From what I've read in his mind, the clones have put the failed clones in stasis. It was more humane than killing them all," Elyon explained, lifting the clone off the ground with Telekinesis. She left the archive with him.

"Wait, where are you going?" Eva called after her and quickly followed her.

"I'll take him back to the stasis. His cubicle broke down two years ago, and he's been here ever since. I'm not surprised he's crazy," the Jedi replied, walking with her outstretched hand over the clone's limp body.

The two girls walked silently to the room where the stasis cubicles were stored. Elyon found an empty cubicle, placed the clone in it, and closed it. Eva fixed the broken cubicle system. Then they looked at the misty glass of the cubicle together.

"Thank you for believing me," the Jedi said, smiling.

"I don't know why, but at that moment I felt I could trust you," Eva said, looking the young Jedi in the eye.

"It was the power of the Force. Thanks to it, you knew I wouldn't hurt you. Maybe you should consider your decision to divide our paths." Elyon tossed the subject and watched the girl in front of her.

"Maybe so," the girl said after a moment's thought.

"Come with me to Kiast. And I will show you a world full of incredible things, abilities you may have already discovered. I will explain to you what the Force is. Who the Jedi are and what their mission is," the Jedi suggested.

Eva stared at her for a moment, but finally decided to listen to the voice that convinced her to trust her and go with her.

"I'll go well with you," Eva said, reaching out to serve. Elyon accepted her hand and shook it.

"I'm glad you made that decision. It will be an honor to accompany you on the path of the Force," the young Jedi said, and the two girls left Kamino as friends and not enemies.