

Sithmas Gift

Regent Anubis sat at his desk and looked upon his stack of correspondence, personal mail, work epistles and other various sundry notes. A protocol droid knocked at the door and silently entered carrying in a large and heavy package. Along with the package came a note in an envelope.

Anubis casually took the note and opened the envelope with a dagger and unfolded the crisp paper. He read it aloud to himself – “To our Regent – from Clan Plagueis. May you have a great and prosperous Sithmas. It has been a long and arduous year and we truly thank you from the bottom of our hearts for your efforts. Please accept this humble gift as a token of our kind feeling and gratitude. In friendship and fraternal bonds – Clan Plagueis.”

Standing to appraise the package he nodded to the protocol droid to unwrap the large package and stood back as the container opened with a metallic thud. Looking inside he nodded approvingly at the gift as the protocol droid took each piece of the Mandalorian armor out in its own time and place.

The first item was a pristine helmet, painted a dark matte black hue with purple and gold undertones and accents – along with a small Plagueis logo on the crest of the helmet. The antenna was a pure beskar plating as well as the frame around the visor that ran down the iconic T-shape that were on all Mandalorian armor.

Next came a pair of gauntlets. The knuckles were coated in beskar as were the fingertips. The fingertips had a small spring that extended out to metallic daggers – more ceremonial than weapons they would allow for clawing and climbing. The gauntlets were also matte black painted with purple and gold trim and accents with a similar Plagueis logo on the inside palm of both.

After this came the boots which each heel and toe a pure beskar adding a metallic gleam that caught the interior lighting and shone brightly. The boots had a reinforced spin up the back and were painted matte black with the same purple and gold trim and accents. Inside each boot held a hidden dagger compartment along with small repulsor jets to allow the wearer to levitate a small distance and move silently and gracefully.

Finally the chestplate. The chestplate was coated in pure beskar and had inlays of gold and purple along with the Plagueis logo prominently above the right breast. The chest plate was more segmented than most Mandalorian armor, giving the impression of musculature and a six pack of abdominal muscles and obliques.

Anubis sat down and looked at the armor as the protocol droid found a armor mannequian to put the armor onto. Anubis motioned for the droid to move the armor to a corner of the office and he nodded approvingly as it was fully assembled. He next took the card and found a small frame in which to place it in. Finally he placed the framed note on the right side of his desk and nodded one last time before standing up to leave.