Population: 25,000

Locale and Temperature: Located west Zainab, its temperatures are not any better than that of the rest of the continent.

The People:

They do stuff and things. Probably reproduce. Not friendly to outsiders but somehow diverse.

Survival:

To survive, during the warmer months (permitting such a thing could be said about a place like Zainab), the people find themselves farming for fish, and other large mammals native to the area to preserve for the more frigid temperatures. The fish and other meats are kept preserved and stored in freezers.

Technology:

The townspeople use a blend of some modern technologies as well as some primitive means primarily because its settlers saw surviving in such a perilous climate as a sport. Passed through generations, most people in Veritas find joy in hunting and fishing the 'old fashioned way'. To keep their homes and stores powered, there is a power grid that functions off of an industrial plant. Though hesitant with outsiders, they do rely on some trading whether on or off-world. Some people opt to minimize their use of technology and stick to building their homes with help of the elements.
