Song 1: A song that I thought of while imagining Sera fighting through a ruined, ghostly city, blanketed in snow. Her surroundings are melancholy, and her thoughts are grim. But, even still, there is a core of hope and light within the music. Everything will be alright...if only she can fight, and win.

Song 2: A song that I thought of while imagining what Sera would do while leading soldiers from Fort Blindshot into a fight against incomprehensibly old and powerful eldritch entities? Cower in fear, bend to fate? Never. She would rather raise her voice in a defiant song about renegades, rebelling against the inevitable.

Song 3: In my fiction, I wanted to have Sera confront overwhelming odds, something that's normal for her. However, in this story, I wanted her to face utter, crushing failure, saved only by the whim of a cruel and capricious god and the timely bend of fate. This is a song that I thought of as Sera initially confronted the threat, a horde of caxquettes, still utterly sure of her victory.

Song 4:

A song that Sera would have in her mind while trying, and failing to fight a god.

Song 5:

And, the song that would be in her mind as she lay bleeding, freezing after being defeated. Melancholic in defeat, and failure, and the knowledge that her friends are suffering and dying. But, confident and sure that she will stand up again. After all...why do we fall?
