

Unfamiliar Territory

Mune Cinteroph (3607)

The Tangle

The Tangle is a labyrinthian maze of tunnels and passageways that interconnect many areas within the asteroid. Some of these passages appear naturally occurring while others appear artificially dug, though by no hands so recent as for anyone to remember who may have done so. What is more is that most are only wide enough for a single, average-sized humanoid to walk. That is, those that are walkable. On further exploration, it would be found that some of these passages are narrow shafts straight up or down with no hint as to their purpose.

It is theorized that these tunnels were built as a means for thieves and pick pockets to move unnoticed to different districts and even older buildings within the asteroid, though none of these is for sure. Barely even a fraction has been explored nor even mapped, and their discovery has many perplexed within the port. The Tangle has thus been named, and authorities warn against delving too deeply into its depths.

Although there is no power running through these pitch-black passageways, there seems to be at least some air filtering in from the districts it twines between and under. Some areas more than others, with some tunnels being so thinly oxygenated as to require proper equipment to breathe.