My lords, I bring before you the fruits of my labor. The endeavor of identifying key targets among this Brotherhood has proceeded as if Ashla and Bogan themselves were guiding us. Praise be to the Seer who directed me towards this unsuspecting pawn.

The target individual, Tali Sroka, a female Twi'lek of purple hue and in her mid-thirties[1], appears to be a figure of some prominence within the Clan identified as Arcona. She has attended several meetings involving prominent figures of Clan leadership and is likely of at least middling seniority among them. A clear lack of leadership or visually confirmed orders from her confound our ability to exactly pinpoint her position within Clan hierarchy, though it is doubtful she would much improve upon this lackluster performance in times of crisis.

In terms of personal combat prowess, she appears to favor lightsabers as no ranged weaponry has been identified on her person during the observation period. During a few altercations we managed to observe her in, she appears to favor the fifth form combined with telekinetic attacks of some magnitude. Of note, she was observed being able to wield her abilities via motions of her lekku.

Defensively, she relies on speed and agility to avoid projectiles, though if cornered or needing to hold her ground will resort to rather durable barriers. She is, however, not very resilient to actual damage and, much like all Twi'leks, susceptible to injury of her lekku.

Psychologically, she appears to have a particular fondness towards children and their mothers, often going out of her way to protect them. This would seem to be a most exploitable weakness that could force her into an exposed position. We also observed a rather strong and sudden reaction to a cave-bat, as seemingly merely the sound of its wings was enough to put her visibly on edge. Although we cannot fully confirm the nature of her phobia, it is likely she is not fond of parasites or pests of such nature.

In comparison to most of the other targets our operation has observed, we deem Tali Sroka to be of designation Mostly Harmless. She has several psychological weaknesses that can be exploited, and her lack of command ability undermines our enemies' responses in times of crisis. Eliminating her as a priority might be unwise, as she could do more harm to Arcona alive, than were she replaced by someone more strategically competent.

I remain, as always, your most humble servant.
