

Ragnath: Crystal Cavern

The Children of Mortis attack on Ragnath began with the impact of a meteor laced with their malevolence ascendant crystals. Several days after the initial attack, massive crystalline structures sprung up like mushrooms from the impact site. Among the massive spires, several caverns developed in the gaps between the large towers.

Deep in the heart of Caelestis City, this cavern is full of deep crags and crevices. Filled to the brim with blood red crystals, the cavern has a hauntingly eerie beauty to it. The ceilings are covered in razor sharp crystalline stalactites. Likewise, the same jagged crystals form stalagmites on the cavern floor. The crystals range in size from as small as several inches to over forty feet long. This cavern is sweltering, with temperatures reaching over 135 degrees Fahrenheit. The air within the cavern is humid, being saturated with a dilute acid which over time will corrode even the toughest armors.

The bellows of terribly crystalline creatures can be heard from deep within the cave and it is impossible to know what may appear from one of the many holes in the structure. The ledges and mounds within the chamber are often deceiving. While they may appear stable, any pressure placed on the crystal may cause it to crack and crumble. In a central low point in the cavern, condensing acid from the atmosphere has pooled into a deep blue tinted tarn. Let it be known, danger lurks with every step further into the hollowed crystal structure.