

Centered in the side of what was once the Caldera Sector of Fort Blindshot's volcano, the Children of Mortis' meteor's arrival was not missed by any on Selen. The meteor has since been removed, despite this the land around has yet to heal. For all of the combat that has surpassed on the island, the crystal meteor has left the deepest scar in the land.

Basalt dust blankets the remains of the jungle, intermittent with boulders and fist sized rocks that had been scattered upon the initial impact. It creates a vividly dark underlayer for rotting trees, foliage and wildlife still billows up from the ground when crossed with little care all the way across the 3 mile wide crater. The sun bears down, any moisture sapped from the area within days of the impact. Despite the rest of the jungle's trees drawing thick rain clouds periodically over the rest of the Caldera Sector, the Poisoned Scar as some trainees have dubbed it, remains dry.

Most intriguing about the site is the focal point however, where the remnants of crystal have clustered together, creating a coral-like structure that stands 5 meters in the air, the trunks all within a diameter of 5 meters, but the branches spreading out double the distance. They fan out, creating the only shade in the area, alongside the only hiding places. The structure itself has a thinned layer of the same basalt covering everything else, but it still shimmers a deep red below the mattifying dust. The "corals" have layers on layers of shelves, staggered and sharp underfoot.