Tuuka would, without a doubt in his mind, pick his brother, Kranak Vurr. Who else would you want to go into a fight with (real or not :P) than your own brother? Both of them boast high levels of perception and at least above average intelligence but with Tuuka having slightly higher intelligence, he does most of the heavy lifting when it comes to the brains department. Kranak on the other hand has higher stamina and might, which makes him the physical work horse of the two. Tuuka points his brother in a direction, and with his high level of leadership, Kranak is loyal to a fault.

Both brothers have points in subterfuge which would help in distracting a referee or point blank lying about an outsider interfering in a match with some degree of believability. To add to their strategy, their both trained in Mandalorian Core to strike at effective spots on an opponent. Attack hard and fast, and when in doubt, a little trickery goes a long way.

The biggest obstacle they would have is that their brothers, both pretty intelligent and have some understanding of tactics. One of their biggest strengths as brothers in working together, is also their biggest weakness. They'd say things to each other that they may not otherwise say to someone that wasn't family leading to disputes and squabbles that could certainly cost them a match.
