

Intracranial Auditory Receptor

A device commissioned by the Technocratic Guild. It is an receptor implanted within the cranium of the subject, attached to the auditory nerve by three electro-clamp wires and traveling down near the larynx to pick up vocal cord vibrations.

A memory card is at the center of the device, recording all vocal interactions the subject experiences.

The guild hoped this would allow agents final moments to be collected to retain any information they may have acquired.